5	New Home Office Research Report - Improving public confidence in the police; a review of the evidence Background: In 2008 the Government published the Green Paper From the neighbourhood to the national: policing our communities together which proposed a single top-down target to replace the multiple targets previously used to monitor police performance. The current single target is to improve levels of public confidence that the police and local councils are dealing with the crime and anti-social behaviour issues that matter locally, as measured by the

	British Crime Survey. Individual targets were set for each police force and published in March 2009. To help inform forces on how to improve their performance, a literature review was commissioned to summarise the evidence on ‘what works’ in terms of improving public confidence in the police, ‘what looks promising’ and ‘potential pitfalls’ when implementing confidence-building measures. You can access the full review of evidence on the Home Office website, (scroll down to ‘recent publications’) along with a two page summary of key findings.
6	Government announces new powers to tackle alcohol crime Following a nationwide consultation the government is setting out five mandatory conditions to tackle alcohol-related crime and disorder. The conditions will be applied to all alcohol retailers to ensure consistent good practice and crack down on problem premises where irresponsible drinking could put individuals at risk and lead to crime and anti-social behaviour. The conditions include a ban on irresponsible promotions, including ‘all you can drink for £10’ deals plus a compulsory requirement to check the ID of anyone who looks under 18. Any premises that breach the mandatory code or any secondary conditions that have been imposed will face a range of possible sanctions including losing their licence, having additional tough conditions imposed on their licence or, on summary conviction a maximum £20,000 fine and/or six months imprisonment. More info
7	Consultation: Mainstreaming the commissioning of local services to address violence against women and girls Following the publication of the cross-government strategy ‘Together we can end violence against women and girls’ in November 2009, the Home Office has produced draft commissioning guidance to support local commissioners and partnerships. It’s designed to help them develop the best approach to commissioning services to prevent violence against women and girls, protect victims and potential victims and provide services to victims and perpetrators in local areas. The Home Office is inviting comment on the entire content of the guidance, particularly on which areas you think are fit for purpose and which need further improvement. The HO would, amongst others, particularly like to hear from: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Organisations providing services for victims of violence against women and girls</li> <li>• Organisations representing women who are vulnerable to violence</li> <li>• Active voluntary sector organisations</li> </ul> The consultation questions can be found on page 5 of the document. Deadline for responses: 15 March 2010 More info

8	Research on the work of social enterprises with prisons and probation services in England A new report published by the Ministry of Justice, shows that social enterprises are involved in a substantial amount of work in providing education, training and employment support to help reduce reoffending. (Social enterprises are businesses that operate for a social purpose.) The report also identifies ways in which the National Offender Management Service and the sector can develop further productive partnerships, both locally and nationally. It was produced as part of an action research programme funded by the Office of the Third Sector and the European Social Fund. More info
9	New database shows guns are in short supply The National Ballistics Intelligence Service (Nabis) firearms database has linked more than 350 guns with crimes in its first year of operation in England and Wales. Nabis works by combining advanced forensic technology and police intelligence information. The service, which was jointly established by the Home Office and the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) in November 2008, helps forces to solve crimes in which guns have been used, identify the individuals who import and supply them illegally, and track down people who are illegally converting or adapting them. Nabis programme manager, Det Ch Supt Paul James, said capturing key suppliers meant there were fewer guns on the streets, and therefore that they were getting harder to obtain.

10	Home Office quarterly crime statistics Latest figures published in the Quarterly Update, 21 January, show that based on British Crime Survey (BCS) interviews in the year to September 2009, crime remains stable compared with the year to September 2008. BCS interviews showed the risk of being a victim of crime (22.1%) fell one percentage point compared with the year to September 2008. Police recorded robberies fell by nine per cent overall and those involving knives or sharp instruments also decreased by 16 per cent over the same period. Provisional statistics recorded by the police showed a three per cent rise in firearms offences. The overall proportion of people with high levels of perceived anti-social behaviour in the local area fell by two percentage points (to 15%) compared with the year to September 2008.
11	Recession leaves almost half young black people unemployed, finds the Institute of Public Policy Research New analysis from the Institute for Public Policy Research (ippr) shows that almost half (48%) of Black people aged between 16-24 are now unemployed - compared to the rate of unemployment among white young people which stands at 20%. Young black people are now twice as likely to be unemployed than their white counterparts. Despite this, official statistics show that youth unemployment dropped overall in the last quarter of 2009. Lisa Harker, co-director of IPPR, said the findings were "a worrying reminder" that young people from ethnic minorities are "far more likely to become part of a generation lost to unemployment and disadvantage". More info
12	New government website aims to open debate on CCTV - and raise standards A new website presents the aims and objectives of the Home Office's 'National CCTV Strategy', providing information on the implementation of recommendations by the National CCTV Strategy Board. The website also offers advice, support and best practice on installing and operating CCTV systems, and provides news and views that will enable crime reduction partnerships to find out more and have their say on how recommendations are implemented. More info
13	Young offender institutions (YOIs) failing to meet minimum standards for time spent out of cells New figures show that 12 out of 16 YOIs do not meet the HM Inspectorate of Prisons target that young people should spend at least 10 hours a day out of their cell. Across all YOIs young people spent an average of 9 hours 24 mins out of cells. The statistics came to light following a Parliamentary question tabled by Tory shadow justice minister David Burrowes. Over the month of September 2009, young people were locked up for an average of 16 hours 18 mins in Stoke Heath YOI, meaning they were out of their cells for just 7 hours 42 mins each day. Also failing to meet the target were Brinsford, Castington, Cookham Wood, Downview, Feltham, Hindley, Huntercombe, Parc, Warren Hill, Werrington and Wetherby. Source: Children and Young People Now: bulletin Jan 2010
